DETAILED ACTION

Election/Restrictions

1. Restriction to one of the following inventions is required under 35 U.S.C.

121:

- I. Claims 1-10, drawn to apparatus adapted to accommodate stress forces, classified in class 310, subclass 179.
- II. Claims 11-20, drawn to a sectioned conductor adapted to accommodate stress forces, classified in class 310, subclass 231.
- III. Claims 21-24, drawn to method for accommodating stress forces, classified in class 29, subclass 596.

The inventions are distinct, each from the other because of the following reasons:

2. Inventions I and II are related as combination and subcombination.

Inventions in this relationship are distinct if it can be shown that (1) the combination as claimed does not require the particulars of the subcombination as claimed for patentability, and (2) that the subcombination has utility by itself or in other combinations (MPEP § 806.05(c)). In the instant case, the combination as claimed does not require the particulars of the subcombination as claimed because invention I requires the sectioned conductor to be an open channel having three sides thus defining a groove which extends radially within a second section member of the section conductor relative to the shaft. The subcombination has separate utility such as having a generator having an open groove extending through a portion of a second section of a section conductor and a portion of the first section member extending into the groove and being electrically connected to a surface portion of the groove. Such requirements are not essential for the operation of a generator since many design generator do not have open grooves in a conductor section.

3. Inventions I and III are related as process and apparatus for its practice. The inventions are distinct if it can be shown that either: (1) the process as claimed can be practiced by another materially different apparatus or by hand, or (2) the apparatus as claimed can be used to practice another and materially different process. (MPEP § 806.05(e)). In this case invention III requires positioning a first portion of a conductor to electrically connect the first portion to a first component of at least two electrical components and positioning a second portion of the conductor to electrically connect the second portion to a second component and providing a support to the conductor by positioning a support structure on a third component of the generator and connecting the support structure to the first portion of the conductor.

4. Because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art as shown by their different classification, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper and because these inventions are distinct for the reasons given above and have acquired a separate status in the art because of their recognized divergent subject matter, restriction for examination purposes as indicated is proper.
